

Eric Agyare

My idea is to actively use art to demonstrate and advocate sustainable living and inclusion. I am particularly interested in growing the interest and careers of artists who explore the use of waste materials, transforming them into artistic statements that lead to social, cultural, and economic development. I also carry this sustainable statement to schools in Accra, Ghana, engaging young adults in creatively reusing, reducing and recycling waste materials. Through hands-on experience, participants have upcycled, developed sustainable games, built waste containers, and others. Younger people have a better chance of reversing this environmental mess if we create an enabling space that will aid them in forming the proper social behaviour and becoming ambassadors in their small ways. I have empowered over five thousand young adults with creative ways of dealing with our domestic issues, leading to a sustainable living. And I am happy to work with partners on this long journey.

<https://ericagyare.artlifematters.org/about/>

